Strategic Management in Corporate Governance

“Corporate governance is different from management. Management runs the enterprise. The board or governing body ensures that it is being run well and in the right direction.”

"If management is about running the business, governance is about seeing that it is run properly."

Robert Ian Tricker
Strategic Management in Corporate Governance

“... Employees and other stakeholders play an important role in contributing to the long-term success and performance of the corporation, while governments establish the overall institutional and legal framework for corporate governance”

“... Governance also provides the structure through which the objectives of the organization are set, and the means of attaining those objectives and of monitoring performance are required”

OECD Principles on Corporate Governance
Two insights, developed by Tricker, are frequently referenced and used in corporate governance analysis.

A unitary board, with both executive and outside directors, is responsible for both the overall performance of the enterprise and its conformance with strategies, polices and codes. In a two tier board the roles are separated.
Strategic Management in Corporate Governance

Management can be depicted as a hierarchy: the triangle in the diagram below. The board of directors or other governing body is superimposed on management: the circle in the diagram. Its members do not form a hierarchy. All have equal rights and duties.

A unitary board has both outside, non-executive directors (shown as O in the diagram) and executive directors (shown as □ in the diagram), who must wear two hats – as directors on the board and top executives in the management hierarchy. The diagram emphasizes the different power structures of boards composed entirely of executive directors, those with a minority of outside, non-executive directors, those with a majority of outside, non-executive directors, and supervisory boards composed entirely of outside directors.

Process-independent monitoring
Corporate Governance is a system in which companies are directed and controlled. Good corporate governance and transparency are fundamental elements to achieve an organization's vision and objectives.

Corporate Governance is a term that refers broadly to the rules, processes, or laws by which businesses are operated, regulated, and controlled. The term can refer to internal factors defined by the officers, stakeholders or constitution of a corporation, as well as to external forces such as consumer groups, clients, and government regulations.

Strategic Management is goals-oriented management in which the mission and planned achievements of an organization are clearly set out and all management processes are designed and monitored toward reaching the organization's overall goals.

Strategic Management is the art and science of formulating, implementing, and evaluating cross-functional decisions that enable an organization to achieve its objectives.
Strategic Management in Corporate Governance

Strategic Management is a set of managerial decisions and actions that determines the long-run performance of an organization.

There are endless definitions of strategy, but essentially strategy is about knowing:

- Where are we now?
- Where do we want to go?
- How are we going to get there?

Strategic Management in Corporate Governance

Strategy Formulation:
includes developing a vision and mission, identifying an organization’s external opportunities and threats, determining internal strengths and weaknesses, establishing long-term objectives, generating alternative strategies, and choosing particular strategies to pursue

Strategy Implementation: requires a firm to establish annual objectives, devise policies, motivate employees, and allocate resources so that formulated strategies can be executed. often called the action stage

Strategy Evaluation:
reviewing external and internal factors that are the bases for current strategies, measuring performance, and taking corrective actions

Linking Strategic Management with Corporate Governance will:

- Allow for identification, prioritization, and exploitation of opportunities.
- Provide an objective view of management problems.
- Represent a framework for improved coordination and control of activities.
- Minimize the effects of adverse conditions and changes.
- Allow major decisions to better support established objectives.
- Allow more effective allocation of time and resources to identified opportunities.
- Allow fewer resources and less time to be devoted to correcting erroneous or ad hoc decisions.
- Incorporate a focus on internal and external stakeholders
- Ensure good governance by structuring authority, balancing responsibility and providing accountability to stakeholders at all levels
- Create a framework for internal communication among personnel
